

Privacy Policy of the International Institute of Forecasters

Last updated: 10 February 2009

The policy of the International Institute of Forecasters (IIF) on the gathering and dissemination of personal information through this website is described below.

Terms and Conditions

- All information you provide to us is held in absolute privacy.
- Your name or personal information will never be divulged, sold or rented to any third party without your express permission.
- Our mailing list will never be divulged, sold or rented to a third party.
- Your personal information will only be available to authorized office holders and employees of the IIF.

Use of Your Personal Information

If you decide to become a member, your contact information will be placed on the IIF membership distribution list. We use this list to communicate information to our members about new services, changes to policies or price adjustments, renewal notices, notification of ISF (International Symposium on Forecasting) events, The Oracle (quarterly newsletter), and other member specific activities.

The contact information is also used to send a newsletter if you are a member or subscribe to it. Special offers are sometimes sent to subscribers on behalf of third parties, but they do not have access to your information as we alone send out the emails. All recipients of the newsletter may opt-out of receiving future newsletters or offers when so desired, and are given opportunity to opt-out of these emails at any time by contacting the IIF Business Office.

We may also use personal information in a manner that does not identify you specifically nor allow you to be contacted but does identify certain criteria about our users in general. For example, we may inform third parties about the number of registered users, number of unique visitors, and the pages most frequently browsed.